Dear Friends of Dii Desert Energy,

Hydrogen, hydrogen, hydrogen. In the last few months, that is what people seem to be talking about. Green Hydrogen and green synthetic gases, fluid-sand solids being produced in abundance and ultra-cheap renewable energy in the deserts of MENA sound really promising! It gives the right answer to unanswered questions of storage, local and long distance transportation, tradability and easy, flexible consumption. However, bear in mind that hydrogen has been a short-lived hype in the past. Nobody would wish for another hype that simply disappears again. Read More

Overview of Dii Desert Energy Activities from Q3

Dear Colleagues and Friends,

In conjunction with Intersolar, Dii hosted another Alumni and partner Meeting at the end of June, again on the most amazing rooftop location in Munich with view on the Bavarian Alps. It was great to see former colleagues, present and past partners, some of which have been supporting Dii since its inception in 2009. Progress of working groups and the different activities of Dii this year in countries like Oman, Egypt and Algeria were discussed. Read More

Trending: The SunBurn Test™

Me speak no good English, that’s unpossible! Such a statement is hilarious because it proves the contrary of its intended claim. An equally hilarious statement is a one that still alleges that climate change phenomenon is a three-scenario hypothesis: hoax, plausible, or confirmed. Read More

Spain is the world leader in energy storage for renewable energy generation.

The scenarios about a large penetration of non-manageable renewable technologies in electrical systems are raising concerns about the need for storage so to avoid losses due to curtailments. This would not be a problem if a more balanced deployment of manageable and non-manageable renewables would be considered. Fortunately, in countries such as Spain (unlike in central areas of Europe), this would be possible. Read more
